

MissingLogic Commitment Statement on Clinician Well-Being and Resilience

The increasing clinician burnout rates and difficulty of maintaining work-life balance in healthcare careers has alarmingly become a significant national issue. MissingLogic is 100% committed to helping fellow clinicians and healthcare organizations in addressing the 4th Aim of the Quadruple Aim, Clinician Well-Being.

MissingLogic offers clinicians a unique on-line education and virtual coaching program to empower each clinician to dynamically balance their work and home life with a proven and predictable action oriented process. MissingLogic introduces clinicians to a new way of thinking and addressing work and home life challenges through education, self-assessments, and tools and resources.

Supporting the health professionals is not enough. To achieve the 4th Aim healthcare organizations must consider and evaluate how the healthcare environment contributes to clinician well-being. MissingLogic is committed to supporting this evaluation by helping organizations identify and act to dynamically balance the paradoxical tensions that inherently exist between the 4th and Triple Aim.

Demonstrating outcomes and using an evidence-based approach is a cornerstone of the MissingLogic approach. We are committed to sharing our learnings and significant data patterns with the National Academy of Medicine's Action Collaborative.

We are deeply committed to the goals of the National Academy of Medicine's Action Collaborative on Clinician Well-Being and Resilience. We look forward to the Action Collaborative to create synergistic momentum across multiple organizations, healthcare sectors and the nation to create healthy and balanced clinicians.

MissingLogic Co-Founders:

Tracy Christopherson and Michelle Troseth