

Solera Health Commitment Statement to the National Academies of Medicine Opioid Collaborative

Solera Health is committed to changing lives by guiding people to better health in their communities. Over the past three years, the company has proven that simply giving people access to their best-fit program, while paying the providers based on improved clinical outcomes through medical claims, drives health outcomes and has a significant impact on healthcare costs. Solera's proprietary technology platform was designed to match people to the highest quality digital and in-person community programs based on their individual health needs and preferences. The company is focused on applying that model to help individuals connect with resources to treat the whole person, including cardiometabolic, social determinants of health, and behavioral health.

The chronic disease of opioid use disorder (OUD) affects our health plan clients, the consumers we serve, and the providers we curate. OUD also affects many of us personally. We at Solera Health are committed to the mission of the Opioid Collaborative which is to accelerate the curation, development, and dissemination of integrated approaches to prevention, treatment and recovery services for opioid use disorder, including for vulnerable and high-risk populations, with guidance for how to implement, scale, and sustain them.

We've committed significant resources by protecting the time of our team members, including our Chief Medical Officer, Dr. Andrey Ostrovsky, to contribute to and co-lead the Prevention, Treatment, and Recovery (PTR) workgroup as well as participate on the Collaborative Steering Committee. Through our academic work, our advocacy, and our partnerships with dozens of health plans, we are committed to putting into practice and disseminating the findings from the PTR workgroup and the Opioid Collaborative at large.

We also welcome serving as a sandbox to test the viability and scalability of the ideas emerging from the PTR workgroup. And we commit to using our language, business practices, and brand to help eliminate stigma around OUD. Most importantly, we are eager to elevate the voice of people with opioid use disorder so that more individuals can begin their journey toward recovery.
